Reviews of On Living in the Township of Heaven

"It is refreshing to hear the inner voice of pastoral experience.... Too often the true voices of pastors are muffled by normalized speech.... The songs of their souls catching in their throats as they negotiate intricate relationships with congregations, peers and traditions. Puckett does not avoid the tough realities in the plodding day-to-day life of local places and unsung pastorates. Here is honesty about the stress and fears alongside the hopes of everyday faith and church life.

—Rev. Gilson A. C. Waldkoenig, Ph. D., Assoc Professor of Church in Society, Director of Town and Country Church Institute, Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg

"Township...explores the "underside" of ministry...and the task of ministry with eyes that see into the meaning of ministry rather than the act of ministry...through poetry and prose [Puckett] explores how ministry is life—life-giving and life-rendering all at the same time." —Rev. Jeff Lilley, parish pastor, Kansas

"I have finished reading and re-reading...neglecting some of my household chores; and when someone visits me and interrupts my reading, I make them listen to selections. ...These poems are about the most serious and important aspects of the human condition, yet the author never takes his eye off of the playfulness and humor that permeate this quest for humanness."

—Jim Babcock, high school English teacher, Kansas

"In his collection On Living in the Township of Heaven, Gary Puckett ... weaves together his love for his parishioners and their neighbors, his care for his children and spouse, and his regard for the land and what it has to teach. While he evidences understanding of rural communities and people, his writing would be equally understandable to any urban and suburban dweller who really notices where he or she is, particularly if they have a garden or yard to tend.

—Rev. Edward A. Kail, former Chair of Town and Country Ministries, St. Paul School of Theology, Kansas City, Missouri

"Jesus spoke in parables, using the imagery of fishing, sheep-herding, and farming to explain the mysteries of the Reign of God. Puckett ...uses the imagery of parenting, keen observation of the life around us, the connections in the eco-system of life, to explain and open us to the mysteries of God. The parables of Jesus and the poetry of Gary both excite the imagination to bring understanding and insight to a deeper level."

—Rev. Mark Miller, C.P.P.S, Provincial, Society of the Precious Blood, Kansas City Province
